A Message from County Executive Marc Elrich

August 20, 2020

In the Washington area, August is traditionally a month where little goes on and people look to take vacation. For many, in most years, it is a time to prepare for a new school year or recreational fall sports. However, this year dominated by the COVID-19 health crisis is far from a normal year. And there is so much going on this August.

Voting—and how best to vote—has been a subject dominating the news lately—even though the Nov. 3 election is more than 10 weeks away. This year, the regular neighborhood precincts will not be available to voters. Instead, there will be centralized voting centers at high school sites and several other locations.

The best choice to have your vote efficiently counted—and to stay safe when voting—is to vote by mail-in ballot. A story in this newsletter, and the video following this message, will tell you much more.

The debate over whether it is safe for schools—any schools—to have in-person classes continues to be a national issue without a definitive answer. Two of the major college football conferences in the nation, and several smaller ones, have postponed their seasons because of COVID-19. The University of North Carolina was determined to hold on-campus classes, but so many cases developed within one week that the campus was closed. Montgomery County public schools will have online only classes for their first semester. Even though several private schools in the County also have decided virtual classes will be best for fall, some still are planning in-person classes. The science and data continue to tell us this is not the safest route for now for students, teachers, administrators, staff—or their families.

As August rolls on, there are many people and businesses that need help. Our County is working to provide that assistance.

The County has awarded $1,126,100 to 28 local food assistance providers to improve their infrastructure. The grants will allow them to expand their capacity to provide food access to families that desperately need the assistance.

Last week we had to suspend testing at multiple County sponsored sites. I am happy to report that testing resumes today. For a list of testing sites, go to MoCoCOVIDTesting.org.

By any standard, this has not been an August like any in recent memory. It has been a busy time. Enjoy the final weeks of summer—but remember to stay safe doing it.
